

Media giant Pappas Telecasting, with TV and radio stations across the nation, will give $325,000 worth of air time on their stations for GOP candidates in many of California's tightest elections. This is first time we know of that a media giant has given away airtime for partisan ads.

Pappas is abusing its access to the public airwaves — your airwaves — to sway close elections. This is not about liberal vs. conservative. It's about Big Media abusing the public trust to advance their own political objectives — again.

Now isn't this illegal on several accounts. Isn't Pappas supposed to give equal time to when it comes to political candidates? And even more important, does this not exceed the $2000 campaign contribution level? It would be quite the outrage if you do not scotch this abuse of the people's airways immediately.

Sincerely,

M. Reed Davis
